Alabama Emergency Management Agency Encourage Residents and Travelers to Prepare for Winter Weather

Clanton-The National Weather Service is predicting a wintry weather mix overnight into early Wednesday morning for several Alabama counties. The Alabama Emergency Management Agency will be monitoring this weather event until the threat diminishes. We are also on standby to coordinate resources to support the needs of the counties if necessary.

The National Weather Service is predicting another period of moderate rainfall tonight along with the possibility of minor accumulations of sleet and/or snow. When winter weather is forecast, drivers should assume the potential for hazardous winter road conditions and plan accordingly.

Tonight it is important for residents to minimize travel, and if travel is necessary, keep a disaster supply kit in their vehicle. It is also important to get the latest local weather information for their destination location before departing.

Resident's needs to stay aware of the weather throughout tonight and in the coming days as the temperatures are expected to fall below freezing in many locations across Central and Northern Alabama.
